The Russian bazaar and the dansant for the benefit of the American Central Committee for Russian Relief, to be held in the rose ballroom of the Plaza Thursday and Friday afternoons, will have much of the atmosphere of a costume affair, as all members of the committee and the assisting hostesses will be in Russian dress. Many of them will wear the Kokoshnik, the high head-dress richly embroidered in gold and silver, set with semi-precious stones and decorated with long strings of river pearls, which is part of the official dress worn by Russians on being presented to the Empress and on all ceremonial occasions at court. Russian decorations will predominate in the bazaar and tea rooms, where Russian tea and Russian cigarettes will be sold. The Russian Balalaika Orchestra will play during the dancing.

The hostesses will sell Russian embroideries made by Russian refugees in France and Switzerland, and toys, dresses and table linens sent here by the committees in charge of the refugee workshops. Much of this work has been done by women formerly of prominence in Russian court life and in Europe, all of whom are now exiled and dependent upon the work of their hands for their support.

The proceeds of the affair will be used in extending the workshops, purchasing materials and equipment and reimbursing the women for their work, the prices set on the articles being standard ones for similar work sold in American shops.
